

 The daily food of Hannibal, the elephant at Herr Driesbach's menagerie, New York, consists of four hundred pounds of hay and three bushels of oats. He washes this enormous quantity of provender down his throat with four barrels of water. Besides his regular meals, he receives candies, cakes and apples from the visitors. He is the largest elephant living, and about forty years old. He weighs eleven thousand pounds, is eleven feet in height, and has two tusks, each five feet and a half long.